Technology Transforms Access to Learning for Children with Spina Bifida in Colombia

As a consequence of Covid 19, the Mónica Uribe Por Amor Foundation found it necessary to transfer its activities to a virtual pedagogical model that would support access to education from a distance. This highlighted a deficit of technology tools among students and lack of training among teachers. Families who work in the informal economy became more economically fragile from the pandemic, making it difficult for them to access resources such as computers and internet access. An increase in school dropouts and a decrease in the participation of psychoeducational activities in students increased the vulnerability of these students.

The Mónica Uribe Por Amor Foundation is the only institution in Colombia that works with people with Spina Bifida, many of whom live in marginalized communities. They embrace Community-Based Rehabilitation strategies.

RI President Jennifer Jones, Director Pat Merweather, and Past Director Suzi Howe visit students benefiting from this technology education program supporting students with disabilities

Spina Bifida results from malformation of the Neural Tube (spinal column damage) that occurs during the first month of pregnancy, causing irreparable damage to the central nervous system. The condition impacts motor, neurological, renal and digestive functioning, making it difficult to perform daily activities and affecting quality of life. The intelligence of people with spina bifida varies. Affected individuals often have poor short-term memory and poor organizational skills. Many also suffer from hydrocephalus, causing damage to brain structure and impacting cognitive development.

Rotarians from Medellín Nuevo have long supported Mónica Uribe Por Amor Foundation and rallied around the need to improve access to education and therapies exacerbated by the pandemic. Rotarians developed a Global Grant to support teachers, beneficiaries and guardians on the use of Virtual Learning Environments and implement these environments to promote school inclusion. The equipment and supporting resources necessary for distance learning was acquired with a plan to support teachers, students and families in distance learning.

A challenge was encountered to ensure for connectivity from the students' homes, as many families live in challenging locations. This led to adaptations resulting from teachers and therapists putting the students and their families to fully understand the necessary for virtual learning. In the training and abilities were considered, followed by individual and personal needs. Another important factor for motivation to learn, acknowledging that teachers face-to-face class or as an online tutor must motivate participants fully in the experience of learning and exchanging knowledge.

In 2022 and is showing great results! The Foundation, along with Rotarians, carried out the needs of the beneficiaries and determine the type of equipment required according to their age. Training models were chosen to meet individual needs. Teachers and Rotarians, in a virtual way, delivered the equipment to many of the beneficiaries. Other equipment was delivered to homes. Students are putting their new learning tools to use in a variety of ways. Accessing therapeutic coaching, and learning life skills to function more fully in daily living are being achieved and improved. Learn more about the project
